Advice for drivers encountering protesters on the public highway

Background

A significant recent trend is for protests by environmental activists on the public highway, with the intention of causing disruption to traffic flows around major traffic interchanges such as motorway junctions and in the process generating media coverage. Protests to date have typically involved groups of individuals positioning themselves across the lanes whilst traffic lights are on red, with some individuals using superglue to attach their hands to the road surface.

The protests have been widely reported in the press and the police are attempting to respond to such protests as quickly as possible. Injunctions have also been taken out to deter this type of protest action. However, there have been some instances of drivers intervening themselves by attempting to drag protesters off the road or driving their vehicles up towards them in what could be seen as an intimidatory or threatening manner.

These protests are likely to continue through the COP26 event in Glasgow in November and afterwards. During this period there is a risk that employees either travelling to work or involved in work activities off-site (such as delivering materials) may encounter such protesters. This briefing provides advice on how member companies and their employees can handle these encounters in a safe and courteous manner.

Dealing with Protesters

Employees should be briefed to ensure that they do not provide protesters or the press covering such incidents with social media footage, photo opportunities or sound bites with negative propaganda potential. This is especially the case when employees are in branded PPE, clothing or vehicles.

Everyone with a mobile phone is a potential cameraman/woman, who will be tweeting/blogging to a potential online audience of thousands or millions. To this end, when dealing with protesters all staff should be reminded:

- Always be polite and respectful
- Never be drawn or provoked into confrontational situations
- Never become involved in situations that would put health, safety or lives at risk
- Adopt a slow, deliberate, calm but firm approach to all eventualities
- Display the highest standards of behaviour when dealing with protesters
- Do not attempt to physically remove protesters
- Do not attempt to by-pass the protesters or drive your vehicle towards them
